Our adaptive Rock Steady Boxing classes promote endurance, flexibility, stability, balance, strength and coordination. Boxing classes are developed to facilitate a boxer's (non-contact) training regimen. Each session includes a dynamic warm-up, varied interval-based workouts which includes basic boxing techniques, and a cool down.

This adaptive small group circuit class focuses on balance, flexibility, cardiovascular endurance and strength, incorporates adaptive fitness equipment and is led by a physical therapist. Participants must be able to independently, with or without an assistive device, transfer from one piece of equipment to the next, walk short distances, stand up, sit down, lay down and sit up without assistance. Pre-assessment and 4-week commitment is required.

Taught by a PWR!Moves® certified therapist, this class incorporates PWR!Moves® (targeted toward individuals with Parkinson's disease, but also benefits those with other neurological conditions and balance issues) to keep you moving and doing more of what you want to do! Participants will be challenged physically and cognitively while working on strength, balance, agility, aerobics, posture and flexibility- to improve fitness, and increase daily activity. This whole body, function-focused exercise class will push you to do more than you think you can in a fun and empowering environment!

fitEssentials is an adaptive exercise class that covers the foundations of fitness. Exercises focus on building strength, improving range of motion, enhancing balance, and supporting daily activities. They may include the use of hand weights, resistance bands, or fit balls. Most participants are seated during the class. This class is designed to support populations with neurodegenerative conditions, such as Multiple Sclerosis.
